Bloomington, IN 47405

Dear Bryant:

A staff photographer took pictures of persons and activities during the Law School Addition Dedication Weekend. To provide the dean's office with a record of the occasion, I send this album of photographs

I appreciate your efforts in planning the dedication and your keen interest in the events related to the occasion.

Sincerely yours,

The addition to the School of Law Building comprises 60,000 gross square feet. The Law Library is housed in the addition, which increases the library space by approximately 33,000 square feet, more than doubling its capacity in terms of holdings. The library includes small-group study rooms and ample reading areas with excellent access for the handicapped. An atrium overlooking the woodland area of the campus rises four and a half floors at the north side of the library. It is faced across the north wall with paned windows, extending from floor to ceiling, which harmonize with the fenestration of the 1956 building. The limestone exterior of the addition also reflects the original building in texture and architectural detail.

The interior of the older portion of the building has been extensively restructured to provide smaller, tiered classrooms that accord with contemporary directions in legal education, an expanded student lounge, and office space for student organizations. A new trial room and a renovated moot court room, as well as computer, videotaping, and simulation technology, further enhance the school's facilities in offering an outstanding education in the law.
